

When inacting a national "No Call Rule" you should consider Indiana's "No Call Rule". It has reduced unwanted telemarketer calls I receive. I would guess that I received over a dozen unwanted calls a week and that has dropped to just a couple. It is my understanding that if enacted any federal law would override state law, and I would be zealously opposed to anything that would weaken Indiana law that gives me the privacy I should be able to have. Caller ID does not work because telemarketers use call block. It will just get my blood boiling each time I get a call that would have been stopped by Indiana's law.
